Progress on the restoration of the 1924 Cadillac stage is slow but steady. The running board structure is complete and the exhaust system has been finished. Wiring of the body is yet to be done followed by the painting and upholstery.

Ed Dilginis, one of the charter members of the Motor Transport Museum has written a short description of the museum and its goals and objectives for this quarter's newsletter. Ed is also a member of the American Truck Historical Society (ATHS) that is re-establishing a chapter here in San Diego. We hope to have the members of ATHS as visitors and members of the MTM in the future.

The Motor Transport Museum

The Motor Transport Museum (MTM) was founded by nine San Diego area old truck enthusiasts in 1986. The Museum is a California non-profit public benefit corporation for public and charitable purposes, and is a non-profit 501c(3) organization allowing it to accept tax-deductible financial contributions, as well as historic vehicle and artifact donations. MTM is operated entirely by volunteers and is guided by its Board of Directors. The Museum is located in Campo, about 50 miles east of San Diego at 31949 Highway 94, just east of Buckman Springs Road.

Campo has a rich historic heritage. Former Camp Lockett, that occupied much of the Campo area, was used by the U.S. Army as a horse cavalry training facility for "colored Soldiers", also known as "Buffalo Soldiers", as well as for other military purposes. During WWII, it housed 5,000 military personnel. It was the Army's last facility of its type, as its horse cavalry was disbanded in 1944. Because of the area's historic nature, the State of California has plans to someday make the former Camp Lockett a State Park.

Two other Museums are located in the Campo area, including the Stone Store Museum that is operated by the Mountain Empire Historical Society, and the Pacific Southwest Railroad Museum. Campo was once a railroad town.

MTM's Campo facility is located on an approximately four acre site. This historic industrial facility was formerly a feldspar grinding mill which processed the locally-mined mineral into a fine white powder that was used in the manufacture of porcelain fixtures and electrical insulators. The Mill remained in operation as such until around 1946. The nine-story Mill structure was noted to be the tallest and the best-built building in San Diego County at the time of its construction in 1926.

Other on-site facilities include MTM's Research Library, which houses a large collection of vintage motor transportation literature, including books, service manuals, trade magazines and other memorabilia. An historic gas station of around 1930 vintage is currently undergoing restoration.

The Museum recently received approval to re-install a working railroad spur off the adjacent San Diego and Arizona Eastern Railroad that previously served the site. MTM's next significant step forward is planned to be construction of a 7,200 square foot Display Building in the near future.

MTM's primary focus as a truck and motor transportation museum to date has been on the acquisition of historic trucks, buses and trailers, their storage and preservation, and their outdoor display in "rustic" (unrestored) condition. Many of these are rare and historically-significant trucks, both to the development of the motor transportation industry as well as to the San Diego County area, that would otherwise no longer exist if it had not been for MTM's preservation efforts.

An additional component of the Museum is its large collection of historic stationary engines and industrial equipment, many of which had served San Diego County in uses such as generating electricity, powering wells, and in industrial, agricultural and construction activity. These are relevant to MTM's endeavors, as they complement the industrial nature of the site

Historic Feldspar Mill at the Motor Transport Museum

Approximately 240 historic trucks and buses are present at the Museum site. Most are located in outdoor vehicle and equipment display areas that are situated throughout the property. Of these, around 175 vehicles comprise the Museum's "core collection". Although most are currently unrestored, MTM's core collection is felt to be historically-significant because they represent the evolution of trucks and the motor transportation industry, are unique in some fashion such as having been built to perform certain specialized functions, or have served the San Diego area.

Over time, it is expected that most of the core collection vehicles will be brought back to more presentable condition, as time and resources permit.

In 1995, the Museum undertook the restoration of a 1912 Mack "motorized stage" that at one time operated between the former town of Foster (now under San Vicente Reservoir) and Julian transporting mail and passengers. The project was of significant local historical interest and involved many volunteers from the Julian community. This fully functional vehicle is now located at the Carriage House in Julian. MTM donated much of labor and the use of its facilities for the restoration.

1924 Cadillac Stage under restoration at the MTM facility in Campo, California

In 2005, MTM undertook a second project, the restoration of a 1924 Cadillac bus that also served as a Julian stage. This ambitious project is nearing completion. Although most of the trucks on display are parked in rows, they are not organized in any particular fashion, such as by historic era, age, type of truck and make. This is largely the result of the order in which they were acquired over a 20-year period, and limited storage and operating space.

MTM is currently in the process of preparing an updated Master Plan that will guide the direction of the next level of Museum development. MTM's core truck collection is being assessed in an effort to determine the future direction of the Museum's historic display presentation, and how the Museum artifacts should be organized. This is being done in conjunction with planning for MTM's other assets, such as the Mill Building and other structural facilities, its historic truck-related equipment such as trailers, its stationary engines and other assets.

Although the Museum has been strongly focused on acquiring and displaying vehicles and artifacts of the early years of motor transportation development, such as from the Teens, 1920's, 1930's and World War II era it has, in recent years, expanded its focus to include more modern post-WWII vehicles of the 1950's, 1960's and 1970's, including heavy diesel-powered haulers that served the West.

Many of MTM's members are also ATHS members who share a love of old trucks and trucking history. The Motor Transport Museum welcomes all ATHS members, both to visit and get involved. The Museum is open to the public from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturdays, as well as most Wednesdays and Fridays when restoration volunteers are present. Please visit the Museum's web site at www.motortransportmuseum.org. or call us at 619-478-2492.
